he insisted on going into attack with his company. Recent illness made it nearly impossible for him to stand, still he went to all parts of the line during an enemy counter barrage and murderous machine-gun fire, maintaining his platoon formations. By giving his overcoat to a wounded man, he so exposed himself that he died shortly afterwards from the effects.

Private (First Class) Frank H. Kenny, Jr.,
H. 107th Infantry—When his commanding officer fell wounded Private Kenny made his way through intense machine-gun fire to his First Sergeant and notified him that he should assume command of the company. He then continued with the company until the advance was checked and the First Sergeant severely wounded, when he made his way in search of the next in command. Failing to find him, he organized a squad of slightly wounded men and, with an automatic rifle and ammunition which he salvaged, mopped up a section of the enemy trench and then rejoined his company in its continued advance.
